

America, and Europe Today

By Shomit Sirohi

Introduction

America is of course Biden and Democrat which is then going it seems Republican for the next election. This is because the American election is always Republican or Democrat though both mean changeable, as one wills. And that is because it is American presidents up there, who do not care so much about black poverty in the struggling sense. Biden did do a union law for Detroit and black workers, but then made it less relevant later. This means Biden is not about the struggle or the race for Democrat again, and it is going Republican.

II. Europe Today – Melenchon in France, as Macron loses and Nunes-Sanchez in Spain and Syriza loses in Greece for the Konstantinos Tousulas in New Democracy a Liberal

And so in fact the structure of Left politics is strong in Spain, and France with radical working class politics still being the main news in France as Macron's changing policies of hike in wages and pension and then reducing the same was defeated by Melenchon who argues for a center-left policy of just being ethical instead. He means he is against mass strikes and such politics of Macron, for in fact trade unions by even say PCF which is now in fact active again among French unions. Some call Melenchon a more changing argument of everything from center-left to center-right and back to left for his attack on the working class and for his love for French capital instead. So he is properly center left with some concern for as Sarkozy would argue, ethics in French style.

Spain is of course strongly leftist under Nunes is surprising and inspirational success on attacking austerity, supporting public spending and supporting protests in peasant sections, Catalan and Madrid classes.

Syriza has lost in Greece due to is love for Snap election strategies and just that in fact over real democratic analysis – and the liberal in fact Konstantinos is chiming as victory because in fact he is proposing a liberal option of just following the legal affairs of the state towards success.